Nixon Bids Farewell to His Aides

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (IHT).

—President Nixon bade a tearful farewell this morning to his official family, then flew to his California home and the private life of a former President—the first ever forced to resign.

As his big jet—the Spirit of 76 carried him and Mrs. Nixon west for the last time, Mr. Nixon officially cessed to be President and Gerald Ford precisely at noon became the new chief executive. The Nixons were greeted by a sizable crowd five hours later at El Toro (Calif.) Marine Base

In leaving the White House, flashing the familiar arms-upraised V-for-victory sign at the door of the Marine helicopter, Mr. Nixon tried to maintain a dignified passing from the center of power he had occupied for However, he could not disguise his deep sorrow at having to leave in such circumstances.

In a speech marked by tears and with his voice choking, Mr. Nixon told his cabinet, sub-cabinet, aides and staff;

"Not only will we always remember you, always be grateful to you, but always you will be in our hearts and you will be in our prayers."

Mrs. Nixon and the outgoing President's two daughters and sons-in-law stood behind him on a platform set up in the White House's East Room-where Mr. Ford was sworn in 2 1/2 hours later-fighting back tears.

As the President spoke, following a five-minute standing ovation from members of his administration and staff, Secretary of State Benry Kissinger wiped his eyes. Mr. Nixon's defense lawyer, James St. Clair, who this morning resigned as the President's special counsel, also brushed away tears. Secretaries openly wept.

Ford's Inaugural Address

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (AP). -Following is the text of President Ford's address following his swearing-in today:

Mr Chief Justice, my dear friends, my fellow Americans: The oath I have taken is the same oath that was taken by George Washington and by every president under the Constitution. But I assume the presidency under extraordinary circumstances never before experienced by Americans. This is an hour of history that troubles our minds and hurts our hearts.

Therefore, I feel it is my first duty to make an unprecedented contact with my countrymen. Not an inaugural speech, not a fireside chat, not a campaign speech. Just a little straight talk among friends. And I intend it to be the first of many. I am acutely aware that you have not elected me as your President by your ballots. So I ask

Schedules 1st Address To Congress Monday

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (IHT).-Gerald Ford, 61, becoming this nation's 38th President today, promised honest government now that the "long national nightmare" of Watergate "is over," and then moved quickly to launch his new administration.

After taking the oath of office at noon, Mr. Ford met with leaders of Congress, former President Nixon's senior aides, economic advisers, ambassadors and his personal aides who will counsel him in picking 2 White House staff.

A spokesman said the new President has asked Mr. Nixon's principal aides to stay on the job during the change from the old to the new

The busy afternoon followed what Mr. Ford called "a little straight talk" after he took the oath of office from Chief Justice Warren

He noted that he was becoming President "under extraordinary circumstances never before experienced by Americans." He called it "an hour of history that troubles our minds and hurts our hearts" and said his first duty now was to "make an unprecedented compact with my country." President Ford said he was "acutely aware you have not elected me your President by your ballots, so I ask you to confirm me as your President with your prayers." The new President lost little time in plunging into official activities, meeting with congressional leaders, who pledged support, with his economic advisers to tell them the "first order of business" is to fight inflation, and assuring NATO and other ambassadors he intended to carry on the Nixon foreign policy. He also personally introduced his new press secretary, Jerry ter-Horst, to White House reporters. The President plans to hold a news conference as soon as possible, aides said.

Congress Pledges 'Cooperation'

On Capitol Hill, Congress unanimously voted a resolution promising "firm cooperation" and expressing "fervent hopes" for his success as President, Mr. Ford, the former House Republican leader, is to address a televised joint session of Congress on Monday night in a kind of State of the Union address.

He is to meet with his Cabinet—the former Nixon Cabinet—tomor-

After a luncheon reception after his swearing in today, Mr. Ford met with senior White House staffers and asked them to remain during the transition, including Mr. Nixon's chief of staff, Ger Alexander Haig jr. All said they would stay on. However, Mr. Nixon's longtime personal secretary. Rose Mary Woods, and his press secretary, Ronald Ziegler, will not remain on the White House staff. The special Watergate prosecutor, Leon Jaworski, will keep his post, Mr.

The transfer of power became official when Gen. Hair handed to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger Mr. Nixon's one-sentence letter of resignation. Then Mr. Ford, his right hand unraised, repeated the oath before hundreds of administration officials, members of Congress and others in the White House East Room, and it became formalized. He

I. Geruid R. Ford, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God." There was a burst of applause from the crowd, many of whom wept two hours earlier when Mr. Nixon made an emotional farewell. Mr. Ford obviously saw his first speech as President as a challenge. It had reportedly been in preparation since Monday, when Mr. Nixon admitted that he had withheld evidence in the Watergate coverup and tried to use the CIA to block an FBI probe into the scandal

The new President appeared to realize that the country, so long divided by the scandal, longed for a message of unity. Indeed, unity was a major theme in Mr. Nixon's speech to the nation last night.

A Call for Unity Mr. Ford also called for unity. He said:

Truth is the glue that holds government together ... That bond though strained, is unbroken at home and abroad. In all my public and private acts as your President, I expect to follow my instincts or openness and candor, with full confidence that honesty is always the best policy in the end. "My fellow Americans, our long national nightmare is over.

Our Constitution works.

"Our great republic is a government of laws and not of men. Here, the people rule... In closing out his short speech, the former Michigan congressman

Connally Plea Is Not Guilty In Dairy Case

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (AP). John Connally pleaded not guilty today to charges of bribery, conspiracy and perjury in the milk-fund affair

"Yes, your honor, I do," the former Texas governor said in a loud voice.

Mr. Connaily's attorney, Edward Bennett Williams, asked Judge Hart for 45 days to file motions. Judge Hart granted the request. Then Mr. Williams asked that Judge Hart not set a trial date immediately.

"The motions will go directly to that subject," Mr. Williams

The judge said he would be on vacation in September and was not inclined to grant any motion for a speedy trial.

"I am not going to move for a speedy trial, your honor," Mr. Williams said.

Mr. Connally is charged with accepting two $5,000 payments from Associated Milk Producers, Inc., the nation's largest dairy cooperative, in return for helping persuade President Nixon to raise milk price supports in 1971.

He also is charged with lying to a Watergate grand jury on two occasions and conspiring illegally to obstruct justice by covering up the alleged bribes. Mr. Connally has consistently denied taking the money. He has testified that it was offered to him as a political fund, not as a bribe and that he refused to take it. His onetime friend. Jake Jacobsen, a former White House

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (WP). Laurers for the six defendants in the Watergate cover-up case expect that President Nixon's resignation will lead to a delay of several months in their trial, scheduled to begin Sept. 9, according to well informed legal sources.

A lawyer familiar with the defense strategy for the six former aides of Mr. Nixon under indictment said that a delay of at least three months "would give a different atmosphere conducive to a fair trial."

The Letter of Resignation

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (AP).—Here is the text of Mr. Nixon's letter of resignation, delivered to Secretary of State Henry Kissinger shortly before the oath of office was administered to President Ford:

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I hereby resign the office of President of the United States. Sincerely, Richard Nixon.

than yourself. It's the cause of making this the greatest nation in the world—the leader in the world-because without our leadership the world will know nothing but war, possibly starvation or worse, in the years ahead. With our leadership it will know peace, it will know plenty." Again referring to "mistakes" made, he said people worry about government. "They look at government as sort of a rugged life. They see the mistakes that are made and they get the impression that everybody is here for the purpose of feathering his nest... Not in this administration, not one single man or woman!" He said he tells such people there are many fine careers. "This country needs good farmers, good businessmen, good plumbers, good carpenters."

Talks of Parents

He began reminiscing about his parents, recalling that his father began as a motorman, then turned to farming and then had a lemon ranch. "He sold it before they found oil on it," he commented wryly.

"But he was a great man, because he did his job." Then, speaking of his mother. he called her "a saint ... she will have no books written about her, but she was a saint."

Reading a grieving tribute written by Theodore Roosevelt on the death of his young wife, Mr. Nixon choked up, then continued: "He thought the light had gone from his life forever. But he went on. And he not only became President, but as an ex-President he served his country... tempestuous, strong, sometimes wrong, sometimes right. "And as I leave let me say that's an example I think all of us should remember."

Then: "We want you to continue to serve in government if that is your wish. Always give your best. Never get discouraged. Never be petty. Always remember, others may hate youthose who hate you don't win unless you hate them. Then you destroy yourself."

Then Mr. and Mrs. Nixon passed from the room during another standing ovation, emerged onto the White liouse lawn, walked along a red carpet, accompanied by Vice-President Ford and his wife, to the waiting helicopter. As the military honor guard presented arms, Mr. and Mrs. Nixon boarded the aircraft, the President turned and quickly flashed the V sign; then the door closed and the rotors spun, lifting the craft into the foggy morning toward Andrews Air Porce Base,

Mr. Nixon's personal secretary and virtually a member of his own family, Rose Mary Woods, stood with tears in her eyes among the other staff members who waved as the helicopter disappeared.

Inside the White House, files and pictures were being packed as Press Secretary Ronald Madson, said she did not know because the press office had not disturbed them during the last few days. This is a very private time for them," she said. She responded angrily when asked what the mood of the family was snapping, "How can you ask such a ridiculous question at a time like this?" Then she said, "I'm sorry-I know you're just doing your job," and she burst into tears.

17-Minute Loss Reported in Tape Of Nixon, Colson

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (AP).-Richard Nixon's lawyers disclosed tdosy that 17 minutes of a conversation are missing from a Watergate tape recording submitted to U.S. District Judge John

The gap occurred because a tape reel ran out after approximately the first half of a conversation between Mr. Nixon and Charles Colson on March 21, 1973, according to documents submit-ted to the court.

The telephone conversation between Mr. Nixon and Coison, then a special White House counsel, occurred on the same day that John Dean 3d warned Mr. Nixon that the Watergate cover-up had become a cancer threatening the presidency. The Nixon-Colson conversation lasted for 31 minutes, but "no recording was made for the balance of the conversation which occurred" after the tape reel was filled, said the document submitted to the court.

The new gap in a subpoensed conversation was disclosed in an analysis and index signed by James St. Clair, Mr. Nixon's special Watergate counsel, who said today his association with the former President has ended.

Agent Cites Nixon Aide's Query on Memoirs

By Eric Pace

NEW YORK, Aug. 9 (NYT) .-Scott Meredith, a literary agent, said yesterday that a close asso-ciate of President Nixon, evident-ly acting on Mr. Nixon's behalf, had asked him a month ago how much money Mr. Nixon could earn by writing his memoirs.

Mr. Meredith, whose clients include former Vice-President Spiro Agnew and Norman Mailer, the novelist, said that he had answered "a minimum of $2 million" but had had no contact with the Nixon associate since then.

No comment was forthcoming from the White House as to Mr. Nixon's literary plans, and therehave been no reports that he had actually begun work on his memoirs. Mr. Meredith said that, as he recalled, the Nixon associate, in a telephone conversa-tion had used the words, 'If the President was willing to write his memoirs," which seemed to indicate that the matter was up to the air.

Several other publishing projects, however, were already in the works in response, directly or indirectly, to news in Washing.

These include public campaign financing, a permanent special prosecutor, expansion of the Freedom of Information Act, tighter registra-tion of lobbyists, greater insula-tion of police and tax agundes from White House control, limitstions on bugging and a variety of other ideas.

There is little doubt from Mr. Ford's own voting record that his approach to most issues is at least as conservative as that of the man who appointed him. Attorney General William Saxbe the newest member of the Nixon Cabinet-and the most outspoken on the subject of Watergate morality—is also said to want to remain on the job. He is said to want to complete what he calls the "salvage operation" at the Justice Department, Because the departures of the first three attorneys general of the Nixon administration were in some way linked to Watergate and its effects, Mr. Sarbe is known to feel deeply that a sense of continuity is more important now in the Justice Department Under Mr. Nixon, the cabinet had fallen to a low point in power and prestige. For most of Mr. Nixon's tenure, the White House staff exercised vest power over the departments.

A total of 30 men held cabinet posts in Mr. Nixon's 5 1/2 years as President. He had four attorneys general and four Treasury secretaries. Defense, Commerce and HEW each had three secretaries during the Nixon years.

Most legislators were still too absorbed in the resignation drama to even speculate about the new President's effect on pending congressional business.

There was general agreement, however, on several points. Mr. Ford, as a skilled legislator accustomed to the arts of legislative compromise, is likely to fill quickly the vacuum which developed when the White House was preoccupied with Watergate.

And if, as liberals charged some legislation was sidetracked because the White House position was dictated by impeachment politics, there will no longer be that impediment.

Long-Standing Policy But on most long-standing policy issues, the White House position is unlikely to change.

Mr. Ford opposed most of the "great society" programs of the 1960s, including medical care for the aged, the poverty program, and even federal aid to educa-tion. He has criticized expanded federal spending, except for defense. He advocated federal-state revenue sharing even before it became part of the Republican platform and he remains firmly committed to the concept.

As a congressman, he sup-ported most civil rights legislation on final passage, although he voted for weakening amendments. He opposed legislation restricting the President's right to conduct undeclared wars without congressional consent.

It has been widely remarked, however, that Mr. Ford's conservatism will take a form difierent from Mr. Nixon's.

Mr. Nixon, who considers him-self an ideological conservative, did decentralize a measure of power from Washington to the states, but he increased the power of the federal executive at the expense of Congress. In mounting his Watergate defense, Mr. Nixon was driven even further into an incongruous embrace of the executive power that he formerly

Most of those who know Mr. Ford say that his own temperament, coupled with the post-Watergate resurgence of congressional anthority, will lead him to run an administration that consults and compromises with Congress.

Many in Washington are wondering whether Mr. Ford will ask the country to unite behind some of the reforms recommended by the Watergate committee and future Watergates.

Ford's Views on Various Political Issues

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (NYT).—Following is a selection of quotations of President Ford drawn from various periods of his public life:

Foreign Policy

I strongly support the administration in its new policy toward China. This is a reversal of my policy, but it is also a reversal of the country's policy since 1949 under five or six previous Presidents, I applaud the President's willingness to abandon a policy that hadn't worked and open the door to a new policy that has some encouraging prospects. I strongly support the President's efforts to achieve a detente with the Soviet Union. It bothers me that some people, both on the right and the left, are apprehensive or are raising questions about it. I think it is wrong to challenge a policy that could lead in SALT-2 to a meaningful reduction in arms production by both of the two superpowers. I agree with the administration that in 1973 and 1974. until we get mutual troop reductions, we shouldn't pull out substantial forces in NATO. So, in the field of foreign policy, my views are virtually identical with those of the President, (Nov. 16, 1978.)

Vietnam

I have never been able to understand why they [the Johnson administration] have not more fully utilized our capability to destroy significant military targets in North Vietnam. This is one way to convince the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong that the price of continuing aggression is too high. I believe that we could more effectively utilize this tremendous power that we have with conventional weapons. (Jan.

Why are we pulling our best punches in Vietnam? Is there no end, no other answer except more men, more men, more men? Would the American people believe that after 2 1/2 years of U.S. bombing of North Vietnam only three out of every 10 significant military targets had ever been struck by U.S. airpower? Why are we still pulling our airpower punch? (Aug. 8,

The legislative branch of the federal government must play a larger role in decisions of war and peace, the role clearly delegated to the Congress by the Constitution of the United States. In situations where the Congress endorses a military action taken by the President, the Congress should set forth the United States commitment in precise terms—not hand the executive a blank check of the Tonkin Gulf variety. Guly 16, 1971.)

Impeachment The Constitution says, in the case of a President, a President may be impeached for treason, bribery and other high crimes and misdemeanors. In my judgment there is no current evidence that I am familiar with that falls within the definition of impeachment under the Constitution. (Jan. 6, 1974.)

Law and Order There is and has been an atmosphere of permissiveness in this country, a mistaking of license for liberty and an over concern for the rights of the accused at the expense of the injured. This imbalance must be corrected

It won't be corrected by the Johnson-Humphrey administration or by soft-headed liberals in Congress-but only by Republicans and others who recognize that law and order, with justice, must prevail in America. (May 25, 1968.)

Government Information

To maintain that the executive has the right to keep to itself information specifically sought by the very people the executive is supposed to serve is to espouse some power akin to the divine right of kings. Congress cannot help but conclude that executive privilege is most often used in opposition to the public interest (April 3, 1963.) Truth is the glue that holds government to-gether, and not only government, but civilization

Americans

itself. (Nov. 1, 1973.)

I have a strong abiding fatth in the good judgment of the American people. When alcried to dangers to their government, they respond. (Nov. 8, 1965.)

Busing

There should be no forced busing of schoolchildren great distances from their homes to achieve racial balance. (Jan. 25, 1972.) Student Radicals The previous administration did not implement the legislation to withhold funds from those students who are involved in campus riots. It is our general impression that these militants small in number, are really using fascist tactics in depriving the rest of the students of the opportunity to get an education. Th: whole approach of the administration will be aimed at this fascist group that want to deprive students of an op-portunity to get an education (March 8, 1969.)

Vice-Presidency

The constitutional duties of a Vice-President are few, and his statutory duties, while numerous, do not really define his role. It is trite and cynical to sum it all up by saying the Vice-President does whatever the President wants him to do, and no more. I have a different idea, I hope a broader one. I believe I can be a ready conciliator and calm communicator between the White House and Capitol Hill, between the re-election mandate of the Republican President and the equally emphatic mandate of the Democratic 93d Congress. I believe I can do this-not because I know much about the vice-presidency—but because I know both the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States as well and as intimately as anybody who has known both for a quarter century. (Nov. 1, 1973.)

Richard Nixou We must, as a nation, elevate the moral and cthical attitudes of our people. I am sure that our new chief executive will be deeply concerned with the moral tone not only of the presidency but of the nation. Above all, he will seek to lead, not to dictate. (Dec. 4, 1968.) I believe President Nixon, like Abraham Lincoin, is a man uniquely suited to serve our nation in a time of crisis. Every action taken by Mr. Nixon since he took the oath of office as President bears out the confidence, the feeling of trust I have in the man who now leads this nation.

(Feb. 10, 1969.)

Executive Branch In my judgment, today we find an erosion of the power and prestige of the legislative branch, a change of the intended direction of the judiciary and an awesome build-up of strength and use of this power in the executive arm. There is a growing apprehension that there is a potential and real danger in the burgeoning power of the federal government's executive branch. (Nov. 8, 1968.)

No Immunity Deal Involved In Resignation, Jaworski Says

By Richard D. Lyons

-The Watergate special prosecutor. Leon Jaworski, stated after President Nixon's resignation speech last night that no deals had been made or offered to give the President immunity from prosecution after he leaves of-

"There has been no agreement or understanding of any sort between the President or his representatives and the special prosecutor relating in any way to the President's resignation." Mr. Jaworski said in a statement issued by his office.

The statement, and the fact that Mr Nixon made no mention of the immunity issue in his address to the nation, left unresolved the question of whether Mr. Nixon might be indicted and brought to trial for crimes involved in the Watergate scandal.

Mr. Jaworski's statement said: "The special prosecutor's office was not asked for any such

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3 (NYT). [immunity] agreement or understanding and offered none." Not... in Any Way'

"Although I was informed of the President's decision this afternoon," Mr. Jaworski's statement yesterday said. "my office did not participate in any way in the President's decision to resign.

Mr. Jaworski met with Gen. Alexander Haig jr., the White House chief of staff, earlier yesterday in a session said to have been held for the purpose of informing the special prosecutor of what Mr. Nixon would be doing later in the evening.

The meeting did not take place in the White House, presumably because Mr. Jaworski's visit would have aroused speculation.

Earlier yesterday, there were moves in both houses of Congress to grant Mr. Nixon immunity from prosecution, but they failed for lack of support. Sen. Edward Brooke. R-Mass. and Rep. John Buchanan, R-Ala. introduced resolutions that would have expressed the "sense" of Congress that Mr. Nixon should not be subject to prosecution on leaving office.

Many members took the pos tion that on resignation Mr. Nixon should be liable for prosecution, with the rights of any other citizen, and that Congress should leave it to the courts to decide the legal issues.

Subordinates' Penalties

There was also the sentiment that Mr. Nixon should not be granted immunity while his former subordinates were in or facing, prison. Yet others agreed with Sen. Brooke, who said: "Stepping down from the nation's highest office and sparing the nation a long and harmful trial would be sufficient punishment.'

Starting at noon today, when Mr. Nixon became a private citizen, he was liable to indictment by a grand jury. The Watergate grand jury will continue to hear evidence on the scandal for four more months.

It already has named Mr. Nixon as an unindicted co-conspirator in the Watergate cover-up, for which six former White House aides are to go on trial Sept. 9.

It is possible, now that the issue of presidential immunity no longer exists, that Mr. Nixon might appear as witness in the September trial, as well as in other Watergate-related cases.

The events of yesterday left unresolved other questions relating to the Watergate case. Mr. Jaworski was appointed by Mr. Nixon and could be removed by President Ford, but only with the consent of the congressional leadership.

Thus, it might be difficult for Mr. Ford to order Mr. Jaworski to offer immunity to Mr. Nixon the special prosecutor chose not to do so. According to a member of Mr. Jaworski's staff. the special prosecutor did not consult with congressional leaders when he decided not to offer immunity to Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon's potential legal probiems are in at least three areas: • His possible indictment for conspiracy to obstruct justice in the Watergate cover-up.

· His attempted use of the Internal Revenue Service against his political enemies, in an activity that could be a violation of Section 7212 of the Internal Revenue Code, which makes it a felony for anyone "corruptly" to attempt to "obstruct or impede" its admin-

 Potential tax-evasion charges stemming from deficiencies in the personal tax returns that Mr. Nixon filed while serving as the nation's chief executive.

In addition, Mr. Nixon might face the possibility of being charged with crimes committed by the "plumbers," his White House investigative unit, possibly in the area of civil-rights violations.

All problems of potential criminal liability would become moot, however, if Mr. Ford were to pardon Mr. Nixon after assuming the presidency. On taking office. Mr. Ford received the power to grant pardons for any federal crimes that had been committed, whether or not the person involved had been formally charged.

But Mr. Ford cannot pardon Mr. Nixon for civil, as opposed to criminal, actions.

Nixon Farewell Speech

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (UPI). -The text of President Nixon's address to the nation last night:

This is the 37th time I have spoken to you from this office, where so many decisions have been made that shape the history of this nation.

Each time I have done so to discuss with you some matter that I believe affected the national interest. In all the decisions I have made in my public life. I have always tried to do what was best for the nation. Throughout the long and difficult period of Watergate, I have felt it was my duty to persevere, to make every possible effort to complete the term of office to which you elected me-In the past few days, however, it has become evident to me that I no longer have a strong enough political base in the Congress to justify continuing that effort.

As long as there was such a base, I felt strongly that it was necessary to see the constitutional process through to its conclusion; that to do otherwise would be unfaithful to the spirit of that deliberately difficult proess and a dangerously destabilizing precedent for the fu-

But with the disappearance of that base. I now believe that the constitutional purpose has been served and there is no longer a need for the process to be prolonged.

I would have preferred to carry through the defense whatever the personal agony it would have involved. And my family unanimously urged me to do so.

But the interest of the nation must always come before any personal considerations. the discussions I have had with congressional and other leaders. I have concluded that because of the Watergate matter, I might not have the support of the Congress that I would consider necessary to back the very difficult decisions and carry out the duties of this office the way the interest of the nation would

I have never been a quitter. To leave office before my term is completed is abhorrent to every instinct in my body. But as President I must put the interest of America first.

America needs a full-time president and a full-time at home and abroad. To contime the fight through the months ahead for my personal vindication would almost totally absorb the time and attention of both the President and the Congress in a period when our entire focus should be on the great issues of peace abroad and prosperity without inflahour, in this office. As I recall the high hopes for America with which we began this second term, I feel a great sadness that I will not be here in this office, working in your behalf to achieve those hopes in the next 2 1,2 years.

But in turning over direction of the government to Vice-President Ford, I know, as I told the nation when I nominated him for that office 10 months ago, that the leadership of America will be in good hands. In passing this office to the Vice-President, I also do so with profound sense of the weight of responsibility that will fall on his shoulders tomorrow, and, therefore, of the understanding, the patience, the cooperation he will need from ali Americans.

bility, he will deserve the help and the support of all of us. As we look to the future, the first essential is to begin healing the wounds of this nation, to put the bitterness and divisions of the recent period behind us, and to rediscover those shared ideals that lie at the heart of our strength and unity as a great and as a free people. By taking this action, I hope that I will have hastened the start of that process of healing which is so desperately needed in America.

I regret deeply any injuries that may have been done in the course of the events that led to this decision.

I would say only that if some of my judgments were wrongand some were wrong—they were made in what I believed at the time to be in the best interests of the nation.

To those who have stood 7ith me during these past difficult months—to my family, my friends, the many others who joined in supporting my cause because they believed it was right—I will be eternally grateful for your support.

And to those who have not felt able to give me your support, let me say. I leave with no bitterness towards those who have opposed me, because all of us, in the final analysis have been concerned with the good of the country, however our judgments might differ.

So, let us all now join to-gether in affirming that common commitment and in helping our new President succeed for the benefit of all Americans. I shall leave this office with regret at not completing my term, but with gratitude at the privilege of serving as your President for the past 5 1 2 years. These years have been a momentous time in the history of our nation and the world. They have been a time of achievement in which we can all be proud, achievements that represent the shared efforts of the administration, the Congress and the people.

But the challenges ahead are equally great, and they, too, will require the support and the efforts of the Congress and the people, working in cooperation with the new administration.

We have ended America's longest war, but in the work of securing a lasting peace in the world, the goals ahead are even more far-reaching and more difficult. We must complete a structure of peace. so that it will be said of this generation, our generation of Americans, by the people of all nations not only that we ended one war, but that we prevented future wars,

We have unlocked the doors that for a quarter of a century stood between the United States and the People's Republic of China. We must now insure that the one-quarter of the world's people who live in the People's Republic of China will be and remain not our enemies but our friends.

In the Middle East, 100 million people in Arab countries. many of whom have considered us their enemy for nearly 20 years, now look on us as their friends.

We must continue to build on that friendship, so that peace can settle at last over the craille of civilization will not become its grave.

Together with the Soviet Union, we have made the crucial breakthroughs that have begun the process of limiting nuclear arms. But we must set as our goal not just limiting, but reducing, and finally destroying, these terrible weapons, so that they cannot destroy civilization, and so that the threat of nuclear war will no longer hang over the world and the people.

We have opened a new relation with the Soviet Union. We must continue to develop and expand that new relationship so that the two strongest nations of the world will live together in cooperation rather than confrontation. Around the world, in Asia, Africa Latin America, the Middle East, there are millions of people who live in terrible poverty, even starvation. must keep as our goal turning away from production for war and expanding production for peace; so that people every-where on this earth can at last look forward in their children's time, if not in our own time, to having the necessities for a

U.S. House Votes Bill to Expand India Ocean Base

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 (AP).-$32.3-million expansion of a Navy installation on an atoll in the Indian Ocean was approved by the House of Representatives today despite contentions that it could trigger a U.S.-Soylet naval race in the area.

The money for expanding the harbor on Diego Garcia to accommodate aircraft-carrier task forces and for enlarging the airstrip and fuel-tank yards was approved as part of a $3-billion military construction bill, which was then passed, 322 to 30, and sent to the Senate.

Critics, including the House South Asia Subcommittee chairman, Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., quoted Central Intelligence Agency director William Colby as saying U.S. expansion of its Indian Ocean naval presence probably would prompt Soviet naval expansion. We should seek to avoid a naval arms competition in this part of the world," Rep. Hamilton

The case, which has political overtones, is set to be heard within the next few weeks, and involves allegations that the two men were spies. Both Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and the U.S. Ambassador, Daniel Moynihan, are involved in the tangled case.

The defendants are Richard Harcos, 27, an Army veteran, and Anthony A. Fletcher, 30, a graduate of San Francisco State University. The two men, who lived in San Francisco, have listtheir occupations as taxi tention of the two men for nearly 16 months in Calcutta's bleak Presidency jail, is a source of deepening anger. These guys have been held this long without a trial, without charges against them," said one senior American official. "It's an outrage."

Indian officials decline to discuss the specific allegations against the two prisoners, but have made it clear that the men face charges under the Official Secrets Act, a measure that deals with spying, conspiracy and acts that are "prejudicial to the safety

The facts of the case are bizarre. At about 3 a.m. on April 26 1973, Indian security men seized Mr. Harcos, who was swimming in a "probibited area" off Calcutta's Hooghly River. Mr. Rarcos was wearing scuba diving equipment. His companion, Mr. Fletcher, was later arrested at the Waverly Hotel in downtown them-the sudden rending of the heavens and the roar that leaves men stunned and silent. The events of Aug. 2 in the United States; the rumors and reports that built up to their climax in the evening had another quality, permitting what is probably the largest audience ever assembled in America to gather before their radios and television screens to hear and see the strangely flawed man they had twice elected to their highest office make the great renunciation.

It was not an act of contrition. Richard Nixon spoke with grace and dignity, but he admitted only wrong judgments and ascribed his resignation to the loss of his "political base in Congress." To a nation which has seen both the statuesque statesman and followed the tracks made by feet of clay along the Oval Office tapes, which knew that the House was certain to impeach, and the Senate to convict Mr. Nixon of "high crimes and misdemeanors." his last public address as President hardly covered the whole, amazing story of his administration.

That story will still be in the public eye and the popular mind for years to come. Watergate is not wrapped up and stowed away in the National Archives with the resignation of its chief protagonist; it will be argued and discussed, brought out in trials and in investigations for years to come. And what Mr. Nixon's role will be in these subsequent developments-witness or defendant, in mere debate or in the courts-remains to be seen.

Nevertheless, the resignation of Richard Nixon does mean that the White House will not be directly concerned or principally preoccupied with Watergate, to the detriment of the nation's government. Indeed, the White House itself, using that name to signify the presidential household, will be profoundly altered from that curious citadel in which Mr. Nixon immured himself among his praetorians. There is every reason to believe that the remoteness of Mr. Nixon's presidency—whether at the end of Pennsylvania Avenue, at of victory for America.

Most historic acts have something of the thunderbolt about Camp David, Key Biscayne or San Clemente—is now ended with the advent of Gerald Ford, more open, less complex, less shaped by conflict, to that office.

Mr. Ford has his own grave problems, even apart from those which inevitably confront the President. He is the first man in American history to attain the summit of political power without ever having stood before the people in a national election. As Vice-President he succeeded a man who had resigned to escape conviction on a felony; as President, he inherits an almost equally onerous legacy, as well as the accomplishments of his predecessor.

The new President has promised—and Henry Kissinger is his guarantee—to support those foreign policies which were Mr. Nixon's greatest asset, and, without the distractions of Watergate at the center of foreign policy, there is arising a new consensus, unknown at least since Vietnam, that promises well for American influence for peace. It is too much to hope that a similar consensus can be created on all domestic issues, but congressional respect for Gerald Ford. and public relief at the prospect of a new and untarnished administration offer President Ford a great opportunity.

The American presidency has known many crises and unprecedented events over the past generation-President Franklin D. Roosevelt's third term (as well as his New Deal); his death during a great war; President Truman's accession, as a virtual unknown in time of global chaos: President Eisenhower's inauguration as the first Republican president in two decades: President Kennedy's assassination: President Johnson's refusal-because of unrest over Vietnam-to run again after his landslide victory in 1964. In all of these, the Constitution and its system held firm. And it did again, on Thursday night, when new precedents were set in perhaps the most serious domestic crisis the United States has known in our time. It was a night of sadness, yet it was also a night the United States and the first to leave office under threat of impeachment, comes as a tragic climax to the sordid history of misuse of the presidential office that has been unfolding before the eyes of a shocked American public for the last two years.

Twice elevated to the nation's chief magistracy by electoral majorities that viewed him as an exemplar of stern rectitude in public life, Mr. Nixon announced on Thursday night his intention to resign following the production of incontrovertible evidence that he had indeed been criminally guilty of obstruction of justice and abuse of the powers of his great office. He has decided to step down from the presidency only as it has become unmistakably clear within the last few days that the new and additional evidence he made public (after the Supreme Court had ordered him to hand it over to a federal judge) had insured an overwhelming vote of impeachment in the House of Representatives and his almost certain conviction by the Senate.

Thus Mr. Nixon's act of resignation cannot be said to have been in that honorable tradition of public officials who have abjured office when they felt their honor had been sullied, but with the hope and intention of resuming political power when and if their reputations had been cleared. Mr. Nixon cannot rationally have such hope. His resignation at this point was to forestall and frustrate the constitutional procedure of impeachment which had begun earlier this year and was steadily moving forward to its inexorable end.

Not even the strongest opponents of Mr. Nixon can rejoice in the tragedy that has befallen him. Certainly we who have been among his most persistent critics take no joy in his personal disaster: But all Americans who maintain their belief in a government of laws rather than of men must be thankful that it has survived this extraordinary trauma in strength and with honor.

Mr. Nixon's presidency was surely not without its positive accomplishments, especially in the arena of foreign affairs. Mr. Nixon, whose political career was founded on virulent opposition not merely to anything that could be made to 100 years.

The resignation of Richard M. Nixon, 37th President of look like Communism but to any effort to move toward reconciliation of the Western and Communist worlds, was the President under whom the policy of détente with both the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China was pushed further than any other president had dared to go since World War II. While the crucial question of limitation of armaments and many other facets of foreign policy are in less than satisfactory condition, the United States is in generally better relationship with the rest of the world, including its own allies, than when Mr. Nixon assumed office five and a half years agu.

> The domestic record, on the contrary, has little to commend it. With inflation the worst in modern times, Mr. Nixon leaves the American economy in a shambles; during his presidency he clearly had no idea what to do about it. In virtually every other crucial area of domestic life-from race relations to social policy to environmental quality-Mr. Nixon's accomplishments have been largely negative. In terms of public morality, the record of the President and his immediate entourage has, obviously, been abysmal.

> But his accomplishments, or his failure of accomplishment, are the least important part of the saga of Richard M. Nixon. What is important is that here was a man who failed his public trust. Never before in American history has there been such a failure at so high a level. This is the sorrow and the tragedy.

> Historians and students of human psychology will long ponder Mr. Nixon's mind and motives to try to understand why this intelligent, pragmatic man followed courses of action that produced his own downfall and turned honor to ashes. At the moment, it is clear only that he destroyed himself by senseless acts in an election he could not lose, wasted his opportunities for lasting achievement and ended by consciously and continually deceiving members of his own staff and his most loyal political supporters.

> When one can have only pity for Mr. Nixon today, one can have pride in the institutions that have proved strong and resilient enough successfully to surmount the most severe internal crises and the most insidious internal danger to have threatened this great republic of ours in more than

From The Washington Post

A President of the United States has resigned from office. It is a profoundly sad and profoundly heartening occasion. The sadness all but speaks for itself. Richard Nixon, a man whose entire adult professional life was dedicated to the quest for and exercise of the powers of the office of the presidency. leaves that office under a cloud of wrongdoing and shame. To respond to the tragedy that has now befallen him and his family is not to dismiss or minimize the terrible danger in which his wrongdoing put the nation for as long as it remained undiscovered and uncorrected. Nor is it to say that the wrongdoing was undistinctive or run-of-the-mill, even though some of the worst impulses to which he and his lieutenants yielded on such a massive scale may be impulses that are familiar both in certain presidential patterns of performance and as individual personal failings.

So the general sadness of the occasion can be said to transcend all partisan political feeling-and so, we would emphatically add, should be the sense of pride and reassurance to be gained from what happened. For Mr. Nixon's particular constituency must know that it required the courage and ultimate decency and good sense of many of those who speak for them in public life to reaffirm those standards of public conduct against which he was judged and found wanting. Indeed, the role of these people-Southern Democrats as well as conservative Republicans in all branches of government and all walks of life-proved decisive.

Maybe too much has already been written-and written too sentimentally-about the marvels of the system and how it "worked." But it did. And it is important to be precise about how it worked. We do not, for example, subscribe to the fluke theory, although chance played its part. For in the end. and most importantly, it was the conscience and pride and responsibility of innumerable people and numerous institutions that combined to assert that 1) there was (and is) a norm of official behavior that is recognized and respected by all Americans and 2) the President's departure from this norm was sufficiently gross and calculated to require an extraordinary and unprecedented remedy.

Cataclysmic as it is, this denouement and the events which led to it can in no way be said to comprise the whole story of the Nixon presidency. There are many positive achievements to be noted and analyzed, and there were also many substantive failures that brought Mr. Nixon down.

In an important and wholly legitimate way, Mr. Ford is entitled to take as his mandate the continuation of that part of Mr. Nixon's policy and program which has not been discredited by the events and disclosures which led to Mr. Nixon's departure from office. That there has been an overwhelming public judgment against Richard Nixon is indisputable, even without the formal test of impeachment and Senate trial. His party leaders in Congress told him as much earlier this week But it will be important in the weeks and months ahead not to confuse Mr. Nixon's repudiation with a repudiation of the electoral will he could have fulfilled had he been as faithful to the rule of the law as he professed himself to be. Gerald Ford, of course, is free to be his own man and to make of his presidency what he will. But we would suggest that abruptly as he comes to the office. he also comes to it with a valuable legacy; at no time in the country's history has the standard of acceptable conduct of the presidency been so clearly defined or so widely subscribed to. This standard will now be Mr. Ford's to uphold and enforce. In this particular duty he will have unparalleled and unprecedented public support.

WASHINGTON,-In the long ironic history of America, events have kept unfolding contrary to the expectation of its greatest leaders and thinkers, but seldom has there been such an example of the irony and incongruity of political life as the case of Richard Milhous Nixon, who resigned the presidency.

The journalists have now written his political obituary and passed him on to the historians -who will probably treat him more kindly—but he remains a tragic tangle of contradictions. and will have to be left in the end to the dramatists, novelists, and psychologists.

There is something uncanny about the twists and accidents of this fantastic story, which may even baffle the mystery writers: The piece of tell-tale white tape placed the wrong way on the Watergate doors; the almost accidental discovery, in a throwaway question by a minor at-torney, that the rooms had been bugged and the conversations recorded: the sudden appearance of two superb young reporters on The Washington Post; the appointment of two stern judges
—Sirica and Gesell—to hear the cases; and the astonishing decision to raise, launder, and conceal campaign funds that were not really needed.

Assumed the Worst Constantly, the President and his men almost seemed to create the things they feared the most, assuming the worst in everybody. Nixon's intent all alone he has explained, was to protect and strengthen the presidency. but the result was to weaken it and revive the confidence and authority of Congress. He set an electronic trap to gather evidence for the prosecution of his enemies, and produced instead evidence for his own impeachment and conviction.

He campaigned for the presidency on a platform of law and order, appealing for "a new morality" and the end of "permissiveness" and was brought down by the disorder, lawlessness, and moral squalor of his triumphant team

He blamed his plight on his political enemies in the press and Congress, and asked the people to trust him and believe he had told the truth, but he didn't even trust his own aides or lawyers, and was finally repudiated by most of his own supporters and by a Supreme Court that included four of his own appointees.

There seems no end to the irony of this drama, and so many odd and unexpected revelations and punishments have come about that it almost sustains the moral interpretation of history. The men who gave their loyalty to him rather than to their oath of office, hoping for personal success through their association with his power, were destroyed in the process—and they will never be the same even if he pardons

Even the man he admired the most and hoped might succeed him in the White House, John Connally of Texas, finds himself in the ironical position of being abandoned by his old friends in the Democratic party, rejected by his new colleagues in the Republican party, and under indictment in the courts.

In his first inaugural address, Nixon said that perhaps the greatest crisis he faced upon taking office was "a crisis of the spirit" in America. And after he had won a second term by the largest margin in the history of the presidency, his ministration summed up achievement of the past;

"Perhaps his greatest achievement," the administration said of Nixon, "was his success in helping the nation find an 'answer of the spirit' within itself. In the past four years, a new sense of calm and confidence has begun to grow up in America. A nation that had grown skeptical accustomed to promises which outran reality, has been learning to trust its institutions again. a nation that had become dividit might have been much worse but the long agony has not been without its advantages. It took a civil war to get rid of slavery, two apocalyptic world wars to put American power behind peace and order in the world, a wasting economic depression to reform the social structure of America, and Vietnam and Watergate to bring administration, because the President insists on that." Nevertheless, perhaps the greatest irony of all is that the nation has come out of this nightmare reasonably united. By his tragic blunders and lonely conspiracies. Nixon has finally kept his promise to the little girl with the sign in Ohio. Ee has "brought us together," not for his leadership and his tactics but against them.

It has been a terrible time, and but for this extraordinary comhination of accidental disclosures, excessive presidential power under

There will be reforms now that will change campaign financing, protect the privacy of our people, control the presumptions and power of White House officials, and bring the public's business more into the open. Nothing has been solved, but everything has been changed in subtle ways, and for the better. The tragedy has been Nixon, and the essence of the tragedy is that he was not faithful to his better instincts, or even to his trusting friends.

A Distorted Mirror

By C.L. Suizberger

A is that Richard Nixon was he added: "There has never been keenly aware of the importance of strong, moral leadership but that, paradoxically he never seemed to apply to himself those standards he saw as necessary for

Thus, I can recall his telling me (in 1964, during his political exile) that he thought President Lyndon Johnson "dangeronsly egocentric and power-hungry and therefore considered imperative "to have enough Republicans in Congress to keep the President from being corrupted by his own power."

When he had returned from the wilderness and moved into the White House, he said to me one day (May 19, 1969): "The real moral crisis in this country the leadership crisis. The trouble is that the leaders, not the country as a whole, are weak and divided.

"By the leaders I mean the leaders of industry, the bankers, the newspapers. They are irresolute and un-understanding. The people as a whole can be led back to some kind of consensus if only the leaders can take hold of themselves."

Then, with particular reference to the Vietnam war and not in. respect to an internal situation which then looked rosy, he said: 'A great nation sometimes has to act in a great way. Otherwise it destroys its own moral fiber." I was impressed by these words and by the long-range goals the President told me he had set himself. On Feb. 26, 1970, he said he was trying to lay the groundwork for a period long after he would be out of office (which neither of us, of course, could imagine would come as it

He explained he was working on an anti-poverty program that would establish a national minimum wage; that he was drafting plans against pollution; that he wanted to face the world's birthcontrol problem squarely; that he was working hard on international monetary affairs to avoid frequent currency crises; that he wished to establish a balance of "strategic sufficiency" with Rus-sis and "bring China back into the normal international communitv."

In a subsequent talk (March 8, 1971), he observed philosophically: The older a nation and a people become, the more they become conscious of history and also of what is possible." He was referring to Vietnam, from which he was trying to extricate Americans.

He described this as "a war where there are no heroes, only goats. Our people became sick of Vietnam and supported our men there only in order to get them out-after this period of change in mood. Somewhere a great change has taken place."

THENS-The astonishing thing And, as the war was "ending." so great a challenge to U.S. leadership.*

> Thus, again this word, "leadership," remained constantly on his mind. He went on: "Frankly, I have far more confidence in our people than in the Estabnent. The people seem to see the problem in simple terms: By golly, we have to do the right thing."

Nixon reviewed his ideas on the U.S. destiny, on policy, on his dreams. He said with solemn. assurance: "I want the American people to be able to be led by me, or by my successor, along a course that allows us to do what is needed to help the peace in this world."

'My Last Day'

Then he interjected something which sounds extraordinarily strange in the light of events: "I work here as if every day was going to be my last day. My theory is that you should never leave undone something that you will regret not having done when you had the power to do it." In some kind of distorted mirror, it is all there: The President mustr't be corrupted by power: the crisis in leadership; a great nation must act greatly or destroy its moral fiber; countries become increasingly conscious of their history; the people warrant more confidence than the Establishment, And, finally, every day might be the last; don't leave undone things you might regret. Everything is reflected, with sometimes stunning accuracy, except for one blank space. The man who gazed into that mirror had a blinding beam in his eye; he could not perceive his own image in the glass. His role, in the things he often so accurately discerned, was either warped or absent and he did not seem to know it. He lacked the gift so Elliott Gould as Charlie Waters: plays a "classic little league bettor" and George Segal (as Bill Denny) is another kind of gambler—"an upper middle-class fellow whose compulsion appears to be well on the way to wrecking his life." Director Robert Altman has described his film as "a celebra-tion of gambling." but Canby says; "It is impossible not to sec 'California Split' as something much more complex and disturbing . . . ted, "the most volatile of all proture areas." However, the report goes on to say that "there were some notable appreciations in prices" at the July 1, 1974, saic. How real are the "appreciations"? A Fantin-Latour, which sold for $27,000 in 1970, made £36,750 this year. Assuming that a speculator had borrowed the first amount in 1970 at a rave of 10 per cent and realized his as-sests in July, he would have repaid his banker £39,523 and taken a loss of nearly £3,000. These calculations don't take into consideration the devaluation of the Elsewhere, Christie's admits that where old masters were con-cerped "a number of possible sixfigure pictures (ailed to reach their reserve for reasons stated earlier, but the $20,000-160,000 market remains very firm."

These remarks about the mid-dle-range bracket mean, among other things, that big speculators are giving up. The "reasons stated earlier" are primarily "an uneasy international monetary situation." Christie's then reminds its readers that to sell well a work must be "fresh on the market." If a picture has been acquired recently or has been offered to dealers and museums all over the world before being put up for auction, its saleability will be prejudiced whatever the economic climate. While true, this statement does not apply to the 1973-74 season only and it needs qualification. In 1971, Sotheby's sold a Fragonard portrait belonging to the Due d'Harcourt who had tried to sell it through Wildenstein's of New York for years. Most major museums had been offered the portrait. Still in 1971 it made an all-time record of over £349,-000. But it was sold before the market began showing signs of weakness. There is a widespread feeling among dealers that the market may fall apart in October. Few believe that a slump of the 1939 dimension will take place. But they fear drops of up to 70 per cent in some calegories.

Selected from many hundreds of natural historical scale and color drawings, by his fellow academician Kyffin Wilroyal liams and the ornithologist Bruce Campbell. Charles Tunnicliffe here shows his tremendous powers of observation and delincation. The more than 200 works in this exhibition cover all the main orders of British birds and are masterpieces of realist art. MAX WYKES-JOYCE.

Save the King!" as they were set when we learn how Amherst sugto music by Handel and performgested that one way to keep the ed at the coronation of King Indians down was to fit them out George III In its Anglo-Ameriwith injected blankets in the hone can aspect, the whole venture has that they would all die of smallbeen carried through in a spirit This is not, of course, to say either that every good-looking European was a villain or that But the portraits tell the tale, all Americans gravitated towards all the same, Mr. Sadik in the foreword to the catalogue quotes Thomas Carlyle, that master of portraitists of a homespun sort. Two of the most elegant of all portrait sculptures are Houdon's likenesses of Washington and Jefferson, But it remains a fact that at the National Portrait Gallery the great Americans of 200 years ago are portrayed with a tonic plainness. Paul Revere, for example was top man in his profession, and his Liberty Bowl of 1768 is worthy of its exalted subject. No one could have been braver cooler or more ingenious in his opposition to the British, Yet in other ways he had that suspicion of progress which sometimes goes with an extreme independence of mind; when moculation was introduced in Boston Revere refused to allow his daughter to have anything to do with it. All this the unmatched skill, the courage, the cussedness -comes out in the portrait of Revere by John Singleton Copley which is as revealing a document as one could hope to find.

With paintings of this sort, so lovingly placed in their historical context, the present show scores most heavily. Carlyle was quite right: When we know what Paul Revere looked like we can judge what an effect he had on Thomas Jefferson, for one, when he rode into Williamsburg on May 22, 1774, to ask for help in the emergency that had been created by the Boston Port Bill. It was men like Revere who promoted the day of fasting and prayer which "went through the whole colony," as Jefferson wrote later, "like a shock of electricity, arousing every man and placing him erect and solidly on his center." And we can all be grateful for an exhibition in which something of that electricity still tingles.

Economics Ministry today countered opposition and union demands for government action to stimulate domestic demand by asserting that the economic situation requires continuation of current fiscal policies.

In a special assessment of the economy released to quiet critics of Bonn's economic policy, the ministry said continuation of such fiscal policies offers West Germany the chance to:

· Maintain and strengthen reletive price stability.

· Accomplish the unpleasant but necessary structural changes in certain branches of industry without damage to the economy es a whole.

 Achieve a moderate economic upswing in the fall.

Inflation Slows In W. Germany

WIESBADEN, West Germany, Aug. 9 (Reuters),-The rise in the cost of living in West Germany slowed markedly in the month to mid-July, the federal statistics office said today. The index rose 0.2 per cent to 127.5 (1970 is the base year).

In the month ending in mid-June, the increase was 0.4 per cent. However, the year-to-year increase for both June and July was 6.9 per cent. By contrast, in May the index registered a 7.2 per cent increase over the year-ago

Last month, 2.2 per cent of Germany's work force was unemployed, up from 11 per cent in June and 1 per cent a year earlier. Josef Stingl, head of the Federal Employment Office, warned that average joblessness could rise to 25 per cent in 1974.

It said structural change in the construction business, where early overestimates of demand caused overbuilding, is now well advanced, with the industry appearing to stabilize at least the set. pearing to stabilize at lower de-mand levels.

Inflation, said the ministry, will be limited to a maximum of 7.5 per cent this year, "a better re-sult by far than in all other Western industrialized countries." The ministry said gross na-tional product is likely to grow faster in the second half than in the first-when it rose an estimated 1 to 1.5 per cent from year-earlier levels—as higher pensions, tax reductions and increased wages feed public buying power. It reiterated that the government is willing, if it should prove necessary, to adopt stimulative measures to ensure a second-half upswing. But it summed up its current stand by saying: "The situation requires the economic policy of

Australians Unlikely to Meet Demand for Wheat in Asia

By Ian Stewart

SYDNEY, Aug. 9 (NYT).-Throughout Asia, countries in need of grain have been increasingly locking to the vast continent of Australia as a possible source of supply. But they are likely to be disappointed.

Australia has the potential for significant increase in wheat production. But the Australian Wheat Board, a statutory authority created to market wheat, believes prevailing factors weigh against any major expansion of farming areas allocated for the growing of wheat.

"I don't see any increase in wheat production in Australia that is going to have a significant impact on the total world situa-tion," said John Cass chairman of the board, in a recent interview at the board's headquarters in Melbourne He added that there had been "a lot of disencouragements" from the wheat growers' point of view.

In his report on the 1972-73 season, ir. Cass spoke of the urgent need for increased production so that Australia could play its part "in meeting the present world demand for wheat and at the same time give the industry the opportunity to reap the benefits of the high prices presently prevailing."

But in the interview he said that the board could not take any positive steps to increase produc-Mr. Coss said that some increase in wheat production could be expected as a reaction to declining demand abroad for Australian meat and wool. However, he forecast that the increase farmers who increased the area of land sown to wheat at the expense of other crops would be keeping in mind the long-term possibility that the favorable sit uation for food grain could change.

In the 1973-74 season, produc-tion topped 409 million bushels but output is not expected to register any significant increase in the 1974-75 season and may even go down slightly. The area sown to wheat during the last season was about 22 million acres. It is expected to be about the same or a little less for the next

The Wheat Board has received an increasing number of inquiries for supplies this year, and Mr. Cass said the country could not supply all the quantities requested this year and would have insufficient wheat next year "to meet all of the sales opportunities that could be presented to us." India, China and the Soviet Union are among the countries expected to be in the market. -

Ailing Economy Is Ford's Major Problem

By Paul E. Steiger

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9 .- The economy is Gerald Ford's No. 1 problem as he takes over the nation's highest office. Drought in the Midwest, troubled bank-ing and financial markets, still-roaring inflation and continuing trade deficits could quickly sour his expected initial honeymoon in the White House.

But while Mr. Ford is not likely to change many of the Nixon administration's basic economic policies, he is given a much better chance of making them work.

For one thing, said a high administration official, Mr. Ford's warm relations with Congress should enable him to work. better with the House and Senate in monaging federal spending.

Appeal for Restraint

Even more important, his immaculate public image will permit him to appeal forcefully to business and labor for restraint on prices and wages. Such restraint is necessary to halt the burgeoning wageprice spiral that economist. fear will build high rates of inflation into the economy for years to come.

In addition, Mr. Ford's accession is expected to restore, at least at the outset, measure of confidence in the nation's battered business and financial community. "He will be able to operate with the missma, uncertainty and trauma of Watergate behind us," said Walter Heller, top economic adviser to Presidents Kennedy But Mr. Heller and others cautioned that while these advantages make it possible for Mr. Ford to construct a successful economic policy, they do not insure that success will be eas; to achieve.

Mr. Ford himself is far from expert in economic matters, and will be relying in the beginning on many of the same advis-ers responsible for the Nixon policies, in-

Moreover, Mr. Ford's image as a conservative, pro-business Republican will make a bit delicate his efforts to win the support of labor for continued tough antiinflation policies, particularly in a climate of rising unemployment. That image is likely to be reinforced if

Mr. Ford keeps—as he is considered likely to do—President Nixon's choice, Alan Greenspan, as the new chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Mr. Green-span would be the first business—as opposed to academic-economist in that post. Finally, many of the nation's economic

Mr. Ford has rarely been specific. "The quicker we get rid of all of them, the better off we'll be." he said recently. But he has made clear he opposes the view of those in Congress who feel a major

U.S. Tests New Way to Make Nuclear Fuel Eye Franklin

NEW YORK, Aug. 9 (AP-DJ).

—A successful end to the long and arduous effort to tame the power of the hydrogen bomb for the production of electricity is widely believed to be at least as far off as the end of the century. But in recent months, scientists have been investigating a scheme that may bear results much

The idea being examined by nuclear laboratories is to use highly experimental machines now being devoted to research on hydrogen power-or nuclear fusion to transform a couple of common elements into nuclear fuel for present atomic power The nuclear industry fears the fuel, now processed from uranium, will be in tight supply by the 1980s.

If it is, it could open up a vast new source of nuclear fuel and possibly even reduce the urgency of building the delayed and controversial fast-breeder atomic reactor, which produces nuclear fuel as it pro-

Scientists attempting to generate power with nuclear fusion have on their drawing boards a variety of devices that can fuse hydrogen atoms in the same way the H-bomb does on an uncontrolled scale or as the sun does continuously. But only one element found in nature is capable of splitting, or fissioning, and thereby producing heat in an atomic chain reaction—the rare isotope uranium-235, the fuel used in present nuclear power plants. A ready source of high-energy neutrons is needed to make these ransmutations, and this is where the experimental hydrogen fusion machines come in. Scientists theorize that a chamber in which fleeting fusion reactions take place might be lined with thorium or uranium-238. Here, close to the discharged neutrons, much of the thorium or uranium-238 might be converted to nuclear

So far, scientists have not been able to spark fusion reactions lasting long enough to get enough neutrons to produce fuel.

Banks in N.Y.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9 (AP-DJ). - "Serious discussions" are continuing among major New York banks, troubled Franklin National Bank and federal banking authorities regarding a possible merger involving Franklin, an official at the Comptroller of the Currency's office said in an interview yesterday.

"It seems that everyone inside and outside of government feels that merger is the best way to handle Franklin," the official said. He added that the New York banks recently have expressed increased interest in acquiring Franklin.

He did say, however, that the latest weekly deposit figures "indicate a definite leveling-off of the outflow compared to the weeks in the latter part of May and the early part of June, when the outflow was running over $150 million in some weeks." Meanwhile. Marine Midland

Banks Inc. said it has completed an analysis concerning the possible acquisition of Franklin and has concluded that "the acquisition of the total Franklin Bank doesn't appear to be in the best interest of our shareholders in view of the overlap among certain Franklin and Marine Midland branch service areas.

STANDARD OF ACCURACY.

Quartz is accurate, not just within seconds per day or per week, but within seconds per month. Depending on the model you choose (and Seiko has the biggest selection of quartz watches), the Seiko Quartz is from 4 to 60 times more accurate than any other type of wristwatch. It's what you'd expect from the people who sold the first quartz watch and who sell more than anybody else SEIKO in the world.

company is making preparations in case of a bad autumn by putting a halt to taking on new staff and the non-replacement of staff who leave. Sales in July were 8.3 per cent higher than in July 1973. However, the value of sales totalled 1.575 billion deutsche marks in the first seven months of the year, a decline of 4.5 per cent from the same period last year.

Second-quarter profits of U.S. corporations rose 25 per cent above year-ago levels, reflecting the underlying inflationary trend, First National City Bank reports. The 1,429 corporations it surveyed reported nearly $15 billion in earnings during the second quarter, up from an 18 per cent increase during the first quarter. A major factor in the gain was the growing volume of inventory profits.
Citibank declares. Campared with the first quarter manufacturers' after-tax earnings rose 23 per cent, twice the usual advance for this time of year. The big gainers—reporting increases of from 50 to 96 per cent from the previous year-were the producers of basic materials. But Citibank adds: "If the spectacular gains of a handful of basic materials industries are excluded, as well as the atypical performance ci the auto industry, the bulk of manufacturing firms showed only a modest increase of 10 or 11 the next three years. Sir Alastair Pilkington forecast an "excellent future" for the glassmaker despite the discouraging effect on investment of price controls. "It is almost impossible with present price controls to obtain an acceptable return on sales in the U.K. from a new investment, even with the most efficient operation,"

Bill to Redo Securities Marts subcommittee yesterday unanimously reported out omnibus legislation to restructure the nation's securities markets - the most comprehensive bill of its kind since the 1930s. Among its many provisions, the bill gives the Securities and Exchange Commission broad authority to create and regulate a central market system, binding together the country's stock exchanges and securities dealers in an electronic network. The bill will be taken up by the full Commerce Committee early as next week. Similar legislation already has passed the Senate in piecemeal form. and , observers yesterday they expected it to clear Congress before the end of the year

The legislation also puts into law the SEC's announced intention to end the current system of fixed brokerage commission rates by May 1, 1975.

But in a significant change from the original version, the bill gives the SEC open-ended authority to continue the fixed-rate system if it determines this is in the public interest. For the first 18 months, the SEC can do this by promulgating a rule. After Oct. 1, 1976, the SEC can further extend fixed rates only after a hearing and a finding that further maintenance of the system outweighs anti-competitive etthe introduction of fully competitive commission rates, especially in the present environment of mounting brokerage firm losses.

The SEC has given no indication, however, that it has decided to back down

The bill also addressed the third-market issue, though obliquely, in a further effort to mollify the New York Stock Exchange and gain its backing. The bill gives the SEC discretionary authority to prohibit trading in listed securities off an exchange floor (which is the third market) in the interest of maintaining fair and orderly markets. It also, however, gives the SEC the same authority on an exchange, which might not sit well with the NYSE. The Big Board had wanted a flat exchange trading requirement and elimina tion of the third market. The Treasury Department, the SEC and the Justice Department's anti-trust division are known to have lined up in back of the bill

Additional sections of the bill deal with increased independence for the SEC from the executive nch of the government, and with back-office securities clearance problems of brokerage

PURSUIT

The Chase and Sinking of the Battleship Bismarck By Ludovic Kennedy, Viking. 254 pp. Illustrated. $10.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt close of "Pursuit," Ludovic Kennedy. English writer and television broadcaster, compares The Chase and Sinking of the Battleship Bismarck," as he subtitles his history, to a Greek tragedy. And as a reader who had just made my way through Kennedy's painstaking reconstruction of these events, I could see what

I could see that the Bismarck was a sort of great and noble hero --as a battleship unique in size and power, a symbol of "the whole resurgent German nation" (and lest you have difficulty finding such a symbol heroic, Kennedy points out that grand admiral "Räder's rules [forbidding officers to become involved in party politics] ensured that the German Navy was insulated from the regime's grosser excesses, that its sailors mostly were straightforward, uncorrupted men").

I could see that the time and the place of the tragedy have a certain unity (at least for sea. battles)—the entire action having unwound in a little over a week's time, within a single, if large, area of the Atlantic T could see that the hero experiences initial success: The Bismarck's apparent breakout from the English blocksde, Which in turn is followed by a glorious triumph: Her sinking of the British battlecruiser Hood, a ship that was thought by the world to be "the embodiment of British sea-power and the British Empire between the wars."

Then comes the peripeteia (the reversal of fortune), when in the act of sinking the Hood, the Bismarck receives a crippling wound. Then the working out of fate as the British Navy closes in on and further injures the limping hero, the moment of recognition, when commander Gunther Lutien signals Berlin "Ship unmaneuverable. We fight to the last shell. Long live the Führer," and finally the catastrophe when the "unsinkable" fortress finally goes down, taking with it the lives of more than 2.000 men.

The trouble is, though, while I could recognize all these tragic elements, I'm not so certain I could feel their impact. First, since Kennedy "aims not to be partisan" but to be exclusively "pro humanity," as he puts it, we experience Germany's loss as England's (and humanity's?) gain. So it is hard to feel much pity as the Bismerck goes under (pity for the crew, yes, but not for Germany).

Second, the whole adventure seems somehow antique. It may be true as Kennedy maintains, that "the pursuit and sinking of the Bismarck will remain one of the great sea-stories of all " And it may be so that the bettle marked a key turning

IN a glancing reference near the point in World War II, with the psychological advantage shifting thereafter to the British, and the critical arena of battle moving thereafter to the air.

Nevertheless, so many more momentous military events occurred before World War II came to an end-and so many of them are still around to haunt usthat one tends to think of the threat the Bismarck posed as a development in an earlier war and not a decisive event in World War II. So it's hard to feel much fear when one reads about the Bismarck.

Pity and fear: These are pretty important elements to be missing from a tragedy. Still, whatever Kennedy leaves out in the way of tragic moment, he makes up for with his down-to-earth storytelling skills-his pithy character sketches, which engage us in large casts of actors undergoing a terrifying variety of emotions; his distinct narrative thread, which enables us to follow complex naval maneuvers as easily as if we were playing with toy boats in a bathtub and his evocation of the sea-that "agony of water, gray-green or blue-black, spume tossed, marble-streaked"which makes his whole adventure unusually vivid.

Mr. Lehmann-Haupt is a book critic for The New York Times.

A New Category In the American Medical World

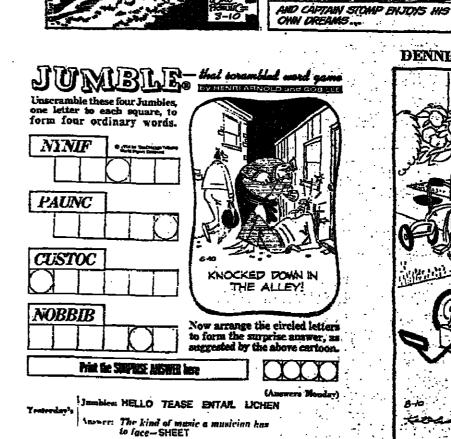

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 8 (AP).—James Brown has deliver-ed babies, treated minor ailments and is called "doc" by many of his patients at Greenwich Hospital's outpatient clinic. Although he has no M.D., he is qualified to perform limited medical duties as a graduate of a special course at the Yale School of Medicine. Called a "physician's associate," he treats sore throats and bruises, sometimes assists in operating and delivery rooms and works in clinics-all under a doctor's supervision. The program, one of about 40 in the country, was created at Yale two years ago to turn out people capable of assuming some of the routine tasks that consume so much of a doctor's time. So iar, Yale has graduated 19 persons and 17 more are expected to complete the two-year course in September.

The PA programs have general backing of the federal government and medical associations, but questions remain about the exact legal and professional authority of the new workers, according to Paul Moson, program executive director,

PERSONALS

"Traditionally, a woman has been led to believe that it is a noble thing to put up with a bad marriage, that it is, in fact, laying up treasures for her in the world after."

The Women of Ireland—A Long Way to Go

CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

By Alan Tillier

DUBLIN (IHT).—Until now it has been Irish men who have U "divorced with their feet," as the saying goes. This meant taking the boat train to Liverpool, leaving wife and children behind in Ireland. Chances were they would never find you over in England.

On BBC television an attractive Irish woman, Patricia Owens, 30, described how she did the very same thing. Sitting on a beach near Liverpool wih her four children, she explained why she had turned the tables and left her husband: "It is fine in Ireland if you have a good marriage. It is only if you have a bad marriage and try to find out if you have any rights that you discover you have none at all. You are just a slave. You have got no rights to your children, you have got nothing. You are, as the judge said in Dublin, a horse or a cow. You are your husband's property and that is it. You have no rights as a human being."

Women's status in Ireland has improved somewhat since Irish entry into the Common Market-married women can now work for the civil service, local councils and Radio Telefis Eireann Changes in the law make it less likely that a wife will be completely destitute if the husband walks off. A timid equal pay bill is going through.

But the BBC program did show that the three-year-old women's lib movement in Ireland still has a long way to go. During filming of the angry wives of Dublin the word among the crew of the BBC "Man Alive" program was "They won't believe this back in London." They did, although the program was edited slightly to avoid any accusation that it was rabidly anti-Irish. The program was picked up in Ireland, namely in Dublin and parts of the east coast. The women told of financial problems following desertion the difficulties that unwed mothers have in keeping their children, the burdens of families of 10 or 12 in a largely pillless land and, so they claimed, beatings at the hands of drinkprone husbands.

Farmer's Wife

The wife of a Kerry farmer, currently somewhere in London, said of life on welfare and running the farm single-handed: "It's miserable, really miserable."

Another woman said: "If a man gets drunk and hits someone with a car, then the family will rally round, but if a girl gets pregnant she is told to get the child adopted or get to

A deserted wife's lament: "I wrote to the Salvation Army in England saying to trace him and tell him I was pregnant with this other baby (the 10th) and they sent back to say they did not know. They say they change their names. I have no idea where he is. He just walked out after 18 years of marriage. Too many children, I think, that was the cause of it. He was not able to cope with them, he just left it all to me."

The interviewer, Jeanne La Chard, one of a small group of women investigative reporters at the BBC, pointed out that not all Irish women were downtrodden and that the country had produced its fair share of female pace-setters—writers, actresses, critics. But she said: "Discrimination against women in the Irish Republic has been almost sanctified."

The film brought her a lot of mali from unhappy Irish wives. What of the reaction among Irish men?

"The men didn't like their shibboleths revealed. But others were angry at the state of affairs."

The film also brought to light the activities of two organizations helping women in distress. AIM is a Dublin-based group concentrating on reforms of family law. Its view is that the absence of divorce plus the prohibitive cost of legal separation makes the "battered" Irish wife exceptionally vulnerable, particularly as there is no legal aid outside of free counsel given by some Dublin law students.

One of the founders of AIM, journalist and author Nuala Fennell, states: "We are suffering now from chronically retarded legislation because someone in power once saw Irish family life set in a cornfield, the white cottage with turf at the gable end, a submissive and prolific wife and hordes of rosy-cheeked children. That was happiness."

In fact, she says that there is a high percentage of families in various degrees of distress and that Irish women need a dignified way out of marriage.

Traditionally, a woman has been led to believe that it is noble thing to put up with a bad marriage, that it is, in fact, laying up treasures for her in the world after."

An Awakening

She decries as a "farcical piece of legislation" the unsuccessful hill permitting the sale of contraceptives to married people only and complains that neither the Irish press nor TV took up the BBC lead on women's rights. Nevertheless, she feels there has been a "tremendous awakening of women all over Ireland."

The other organization, CHERISH, helps unwed mothers and there are now 300 members. One CHERISH member: "At first, I thought it would be impossible to keep my child. At best I thought of going to England, but then I decided to keep him so that he would know his natural mother." An unmarried schoolteacher with a child was visibly nervous before the cameras as parents of her pupils did not know about her child.

"I agreed to talk because I think attitudes must change slowly."

Miss La Chard interviewed outspoken priests and some doctors already prescribing the pill. Since the TV show there has been a move to force the doctor, who practices in the Dublin suburb of Ballyfermot, to resign and one priest, who put some of the blame on St. Augustine, has temporarily left the

William Duncan, lecturer in family law in Dublin, is not so optimistic about change despite a bill going through which would seek to enforce maintenance payments from the runaway husbands in England. "It's been on the cards for 10 years now." He said that 3,000 Irish women were now receiving deserted wives' allowances from the government but that there were 5,000 to 7,000 other deserted wives in distress. "I don't think the BBC program will have much impact. Trouble is, defects in the law in Ireland are now accepted. Family law reform is not vote-catching."

But the silent majority is no longer so silent. As Patricia Owens, now living in Liverpool, stated bluntly: "Unless the law is changed over, there I shall advise my children never to get married in Ireland, Never take that chance."
